Blue Diamond Adds High Precision Machined Shafts to its Range of Quality Engineered Components

Blue Diamond, the Southampton-based engineering company, has further expanded its range of engineered components to include the supply of high precision-machined shafts. These shafts are a critical component in a wide range of rotating machinery and equipment. Typical applications include pumps, conveyors and mixers. Blue Diamond can offer components in a wide variety of materials and may include features such as oilways, keyways, threads, and splines. Low or high volumes can be manufactured economically.

Blue Diamond specialises in providing precision, low cost engineered components for its customers. By using the latest 3D CAD software packages, manufacturing data and customer requirements are reliably and efficiently communicated to provide the most economical solution. Blue Diamond can work from product samples, traditional engineering drawings or electronic files.

Exacting quality standards are maintained by using established manufacturing partners. With over 30 years experience in sourcing components from the Far East, Blue Diamond has built a secure and cost effective supply chain.

Blue Diamond recognises that shafts are a key component in a rotating machine. Having invested heavily in the latest inspection equipment, all features are rigorously checked once the shafts have arrived in the UK. For example, many shafts incorporate critical seal running areas, which must be machined and inspected, to exacting standards to prevent costly leaks during service.

Finished products are appropriately packaged to protect them during transportation. And, because Blue Diamond is able to ship in bulk, shipping costs are minimised providing further savings for the customer. Stockholding facilities and a mature logistic capability exist to guarantee continuity of supply.
